Abstract

Sahnun's religious-conservative thought, as articulated by a prominent ninth-century Maliki jurist, made a significant contribution to preserving Islamic orthodoxy through his monumental work al-Mudawwanah al-Kubrā. This intellectual orientation emphasizes strong adherence to authoritative religious texts, the authority of the ulama, and the strict implementation of Islamic legal practices. Meanwhile, pesantren in Indonesia are widely recognized as traditional Islamic educational institutions that prioritize discipline, obedience to scholarly authority, and the embedding religious character. The intersection between Sahnun's conservatism and the pesantren tradition therefore warrants closer scholarly examination. The central research question of this study concerns how Sahnun's religious-conservative thought is understood and the extent to which it is relevant to the pesantren educational system. This study employs a Systematic Literature Review (SLR) approach following the PRISMA guidelines. Data were drawn from 21 Scopus-indexed journal articles published between 2015 and 2025. The selection process involved identification, screening, eligibility assessment, and the synthesis of relevant findings. The results indicate that key elements of Sahnun's religious conservatism, such as textual authority, fiqh discipline, and a firm commitment to preserving tradition, exhibit strong resonance with contemporary pesantren education. This study affirms that Sahnun's conservatism not only played a crucial role in the historical development of Islamic law but also provides a normative and epistemological foundation for the continuity of pesantren as Islamic educational institutions in the contemporary era.

Introduction

Within the historical landscape of Islamic legal thought, the name Abū Sa'īd 'Abd al-Salām ibn Sa'īd ibn Ḥabīb al-Tanūkhī al-Qayrawānī, more widely known as Sahnūn (160–240 AH / 776–854 CE), occupies a central position, particularly in the development of the Mālikī school of law in the Maghrib (North Africa).¹ The appellation “Sahnūn” emerged as a distinctive societal designation, reflecting the considerable social, moral, and intellectual influence he exercised during his lifetime.² Sahnūn lived in a period marked by intense political, social, and religious dynamics. Qayrawān, where he devoted much of his scholarly life, was one of the major centers of Islamic civilization after Medina and al-Andalus. The city developed into a hub of learning and a stronghold of Mālikī jurisprudence. Sahnūn's presence within this context exerted a profound influence on the consolidation of Islamic legal authority in the Maghrib region.³

His monumental work, al-Mudawwanah al-Kubrā, stands as enduring evidence of his intellectual contribution. This text represents a comprehensive codification of Islamic law within the Mālikī tradition, compiled through intensive scholarly dialogue with 'Abd al-Raḥmān ibn al-Qāsim, one of the principal disciples of Imām Mālik. Al-Mudawwanah contains a systematic compilation of legal opinions (fatāwā), doctrinal positions, and juridical debates derived not only from Imām Mālik but also from the interpretive elaborations of his students. Owing to its structured organization, the work functions as an encyclopedic reference for Mālikī jurisprudence, guiding Muslims in the implementation of Islamic law.⁴

Within the Mālikī school, Sahnūn is widely regarded as the “guardian of orthodoxy.” While Imām Mālik is recognized as the founder of the school, Sahnūn is understood as the figure who safeguarded its doctrinal integrity and ensured its fidelity to foundational teachings.⁵ He was known for his firm rejection of legal practices deemed deviant or excessively permissive, even when such positions brought him into conflict with political authorities. Notably, he refused legal compromises that could weaken the authority of the sharī'a for political expediency. This stance reflects a religious-conservative orientation, an intellectual and practical posture that emphasizes obedience to revealed texts and the preservation of scholarly tradition against excessive rationalism and political pressure.⁶

In contemporary Islamic studies, the term religious conservatism is used to describe a mode of thought that prioritizes doctrinal stability, reverence for textual authority, and commitment to established scholarly traditions. Epistemologically, religious conservatism does not necessarily imply rigidity or resistance to change; rather, it functions as a strategy to safeguard the purity of revelation from interpretations that may distort Islamic values.⁷ In the context of Islamic education, religious-conservative approaches emphasize textual and traditional modes of instruction, with a primary focus on moral formation and character development, although they tend to exhibit limited adaptability to innovation.⁸

Generally, religious conservatism is characterized by several key features: (1) the primacy of naṣṣ (the Qur'an and Sunnah) as the ultimate and definitive sources of law; (2) respect for the legacy of classical scholars as custodians of scholarly authority; (3) prudence (iḥtiyāt) in the exercise of ijtihād, thereby limiting excessive rational speculation; and (4) a normative orientation emphasizing obedience, discipline, and social stability.⁹ Historically, this orientation often emerged as a response to waves of rationalism, Greek philosophical influence, and external intellectual currents perceived as threatening the centrality of revelation as the source of truth. Conservative scholars sought to draw clear boundaries between knowledge grounded in sacred texts and speculative forms of reasoning.¹⁰

Sahnūn represents a concrete embodiment of this religious conservatism. Through al-Mudawwanah, he reaffirmed the importance of scholarly transmission (sanad), rejected overly liberal legal interpretations, and emphasized fiqh as the foundation of socio-religious life. The conservatism he advanced was not merely a product of his historical context but a methodological legacy aimed at preserving Islamic orthodoxy across generations.¹¹

In the Indonesian context, pesantren constitute traditional Islamic educational institutions with deep historical roots. These institutions are believed to have emerged between the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries alongside the spread of Islam in the archipelago.¹² Pesantren developed as localized adaptations of Middle Eastern Islamic educational systems, possessing distinctive characteristics that differentiate them from other educational institutions.¹³ The core elements of pesantren include: (1) the keiai as an authoritative figure and spiritual leader; (2) santri who reside in dormitories to pursue religious knowledge; (3) the kitab kuning (classical Islamic texts) as primary learning materials encompassing fiqh, Qur'anic exegesis, ḥadīth, theology, and Sufism; and (4) traditional instructional methods such as bandongan (teacher-centered reading) and sorogan (individual student recitation before the teacher).¹⁴

Pesantren education has proven effective in cultivating moral character, discipline, responsibility, and spirituality through religious instruction, ritual practice, and a communal boarding-based lifestyle grounded in Islamic values.¹⁵ Beyond their educational function, pesantren have historically served as moral and social fortresses within society. During the colonial period, they acted as centers of resistance, while in the modern era they have expanded by adopting formal curricula, integrating technology, and engaging in community economic empowerment initiatives.^{16 17} Contemporary pesantren curricula are expected to be holistic, integrative, and comprehensive, encompassing not only religious and spiritual dimensions but also general knowledge, practical skills, and character formation.¹⁸

Despite these developments, pesantren continue to preserve their conservative identity, manifested in reverence for keiai authority, the centrality of classical texts, and a strong emphasis on moral embedding. It is precisely this identity that sustains the relevance of pesantren in contemporary society. The conservative values upheld by pesantren closely align with Sahnūn's intellectual orientation, particularly in terms of knowledge transmission through sanad, adherence to fiqh, and respect for scholars as heirs of prophetic authority.¹⁹ To achieve institutional excellence, pesantren must implement policy reforms that allow for the integration of knowledge, skills, and innovation without abandoning their religious-conservative character.²⁰ Their continued relevance depends on their ability to preserve classical Islamic traditions while responding constructively to the challenges of modernity. In this sense, pesantren exemplify how religious conservatism need not entail stagnation but can function as a source of identity preservation and social cohesion.²¹

While numerous studies have examined Sahnūn, particularly within the fields of Islamic law and Mālikī legal history,²² and extensive scholarship has explored pesantren in Indonesia from historical, curricular, political, and social perspectives,^{23 24 25} this study introduces a distinct contribution. Its primary novelty lies in reformulating Sahnūn's religious-conservative thought as a normative educational framework that is structural and functional, rather than merely a classical juridical doctrine confined to the third-century Hijri context of North Africa.

Conceptually, this study identifies four core dimensions of Sahnūn's religious conservatism, scholarly authority, the normativity of the shari'a, education as a mechanism for transmitting orthodoxy, and social stability, as the architectural foundation of classical Islamic conservative education. This approach moves beyond textual description by demonstrating that Sahnūn's conservatism operates as a regulatory mechanism linking law, education, and social order simultaneously.

A further contribution of this study lies in its analysis of the structural-normative relevance of Sahnūn's thought within contemporary pesantren education, an area that has received limited explicit scholarly attention. The study demonstrates that the continuity of Sahnūn's intellectual legacy in pesantren is neither literal nor ahistorical but manifests as a deep structure shaping kiai leadership patterns, turāth-based curricular orientations, and pedagogical practices emphasizing adab, discipline, and collective morality.

The global theoretical contribution of this research is its positioning of pesantren as sites for the actualization of reflective classical Islamic conservatism, wherein fidelity to orthodoxy coexists with adaptive engagement in social change. This perspective challenges dominant assumptions in Islamic education studies that portray conservatism as an obstacle to modernization and instead demonstrates that religious conservatism can function as pedagogical capital for sustaining moral stability, social cohesion, and the continuity of scholarly tradition.

Accordingly, this study addresses two central research questions: (1) What are the defining characteristics of Sahnūn's religious-conservative thought? and (2) How is Sahnūn's religious-conservative thought relevant to contemporary pesantren education? The objective of this research is not only to enrich the study of Sahnūn from the perspective of classical Islamic jurisprudence but also to open a dialogue between classical Islamic intellectual heritage and the contemporary realities of pesantren education in Indonesia. Through a Systematic Literature Review (SLR) approach, this study seeks to make a conceptual contribution to pesantren studies while reaffirming Sahnūn's position as a foundational figure in Islamic conservatism whose thought remains relevant today.

Method

1. Type and Research Design (SLR-PRISMA)

This study employs a Systematic Literature Review (SLR) as its research type and design.²⁶ The SLR approach was selected to systematically identify, evaluate, and synthesize scholarly findings relevant to Sahnun's religious-conservative thought and its relevance to contemporary pesantren education. This approach enables the development of a comprehensive, structured, and evidence-based conceptual overview derived from up-to-date academic literature.²⁷

In its implementation, this study adopts the PRISMA (Preferred Reporting Items for Systematic Reviews and Meta-Analyses) framework²⁸ to ensure transparency, accountability, and replicability in the literature selection process. PRISMA guidelines were applied at each stage, including identification, screening, eligibility assessment, and inclusion of the articles analyzed.²⁹ The SLR–PRISMA workflow is illustrated in Figure 1 to clarify the research stages and to strengthen methodological validity.

2. Data Sources and Characteristics

The data sources for this study consist of scholarly journal articles indexed in Scopus. Scopus was selected due to its academic quality standards, source credibility, and rigorous peer-review process. The literature reviewed was limited to publications from 2015 to 2025 to ensure relevance to contemporary scholarly developments.

The characteristics of the analyzed data include articles that address: (1) religious conservatism in Islam; (2) classical juristic figures and traditions, particularly the Mālikī school and Sahnun; (3) traditional Islamic education; and (4) pesantren education and religious character formation.

All included articles are peer-reviewed publications written in English, thereby meeting international standards of academic publication.

3. Data Collection Procedures

Data collection followed four main stages in accordance with the PRISMA framework: identification, screening, eligibility, and inclusion.³⁰

a. Identification

At this stage, the researchers formulated the research questions (RQ1 and RQ2) as the basis for the literature search. The search was conducted using the Scopus database with relevant keywords, including religious-conservative, Sahnun, Islamic conservatism, classical fiqh, traditional Islamic education, and pesantren education. This initial search yielded 186 articles.

b. Screening

The collected articles were screened based on their titles, abstracts, and keywords. This process aimed to eliminate studies that were not aligned with the focus of the research. Language and publication-year restrictions were also applied at this stage.

Sahnun's Religious-Conservative Educational Thought and Its Relevance to Contemporary Pesantren Education: A Systematic Literature Review

c. Eligibility

Articles that passed the initial screening were then assessed for eligibility through full-text reading. The evaluation was conducted using predefined inclusion and exclusion criteria, including year of publication, Scopus indexation, publication type, topical relevance, and language quality.

d. Inclusion

From the initial pool of 186 articles, following the screening and eligibility assessment processes, 21 Scopus-indexed articles met all criteria and were deemed the most relevant for in-depth analysis in this study.

4. Data Analysis Techniques

The data analysis techniques employed in this study include qualitative thematic analysis and conceptual synthesis.³¹ Each included article was analyzed to identify key themes, patterns of argumentation, and conceptual frameworks related to religious conservatism and Islamic educational practices.

The analysis was conducted through several stages: (1) thematic coding of key concepts; (2) thematic categorization based on similarities and differences in arguments; (3) critical interpretation to identify relationships between Sahnun's thought and contemporary pesantren education; and (4) conceptual synthesis to formulate patterns of continuity and normative–structural relevance.

Through this approach, the study not only maps existing literature findings but also develops an integrative theoretical understanding of the position of Sahnun's religious-conservative thought within the tradition and contemporary practice of pesantren education.

Results and Discussion

From the literature search and selection process, a total of 21 articles met the inclusion criteria, namely publications released between 2015 and 2025, indexed in Scopus, and directly relevant to the focus of this study. All selected articles underwent rigorous screening to ensure their alignment with the two primary research questions: (1) What are the defining characteristics of Sahnun's religious-conservative thought? and (2) How is Sahnun's religious-conservative thought relevant to contemporary pesantren education in Indonesia? The selected articles were drawn from a range of international journals spanning interconnected disciplines, including Islamic legal studies, theolog-

RQ1. What Are the Characteristics of Sahnun's Religious-Conservative Thought?

1. Representation of Sahnun's Religious-Conservative Thought in Classical Islamic Literature

In classical Islamic literature, Sahnun ibn Sa'īd al-Tanūkhī is consistently represented as a scholar who positioned religious conservatism as a normative principle in both law and education.³² His role as the principal codifier of al-Mudawwanah al-Kubrā places him not merely as a compiler of Mālikī juridical opinions but as a guardian of Islamic legal orthodoxy.^{33 34} Both classical sources and contemporary studies indicate that Sahnun's conservatism emerged from the need to maintain normative stability within the Muslim community amid the plurality of theological and legal views that characterized the third century Hijri.³⁵

From the historiographical perspective of Islamic thought, this representation is consistent with the core features of religious conservatism, which prioritizes revealed texts and scholarly tradition as the primary sources of legitimacy.³⁶ Cross-disciplinary studies reviewed in this research, spanning jurisprudence, sociology of religion, and education, demonstrate that religious conservatism, whether classical or modern, exhibits relatively similar patterns: textual orientation, caution toward innovation, and a strong emphasis on normative enforcement.³⁷ Accordingly, Sahnun may be positioned as an archetypal representative of classical Islamic conservatism whose intellectual legacy continues to be reproduced across historical contexts, including contemporary Islamic education.³⁸

2. Core Characteristics of Sahnun's Religious-Conservative Thought

The literature analysis reveals that Sahnun's religious-conservative thought encompasses several interrelated core characteristics. First, fiqh textualism as an epistemological foundation.³⁹ Sahnun's strong commitment to the authoritative texts of the sharī'a underscores his position that Islamic law should not be determined solely by social considerations but must be grounded in revealed texts and established uṣūl al-fiqh methodologies. This finding aligns with studies on classical jurists who regarded textual authority as the primary boundary of legal interpretation.^{40 41}

Second, firmness in the enforcement of law. Sahnun's strict stance toward violations of the sharī'a reflects the view that law functions as an instrument for moral formation and social order. This pattern parallels the findings of Schwadel and Anderson, who identify a tendency among modern religious-conservative groups to support punitive measures as expressions of moral justice.⁴² Within Islamic education, disciplinary practices grounded in legal norms, as identified by Damopolii et al., further demonstrate the continuity between classical conservatism and contemporary pedagogical practices.⁴³

Third, the protection of communal identity and orthodoxy. Sahnun's rejection of theological compromise with groups deemed deviant mirrors, from a sociological perspective, the exclusivist tendencies observed in modern conservative groups.^{44 45} This exclusivism functions not merely as a social attitude but as a strategic mechanism for safeguarding normative purity and religious identity.

Fourth, an educational orientation toward the transmission of orthodoxy rather than ideological experimentation. In Sahnun's perspective, education is directed toward preserving the continuity of Islamic legal and moral traditions. This orientation resonates with the findings of Casey and Brow, which indicate that conservative education primarily aims to maintain values, stability, and normative compliance.^{46 47}

Fifth, an emphasis on morality and social regulation. Sahnun viewed violations of the shari‘a as threats to the collective social order rather than as purely individual failings. This perspective aligns with Silver’s assertion that, within religious conservatism, law functions as a binding moral force that sustains collective cohesion.⁴⁸

Table 1. Characteristics of Sahnun’s Thought

No.	Characteristics of Sahnun’s Religious Conservatism	Conceptual Description
1	Fiqh textualism as an epistemological foundation	Sahnun’s legal thought is firmly grounded in revealed texts and classical uṣūl al-fiqh methodology. Islamic law is understood as a normative system autonomous from socio-pragmatic considerations, with revelation serving as the ultimate boundary of interpretive legitimacy.
2	Firmness in legal enforcement	Sahnun’s strictness reflects the view that law functions as an instrument of moral formation and social order. Severe sanctions are normatively justified to preserve moral justice and collective discipline.
3	Protection of communal identity and orthodoxy	The rejection of theological compromise serves as a strategy to safeguard doctrinal purity and the boundaries of orthodoxy. This exclusivism functions as a mechanism for protecting religious identity.
4	Educational orientation toward orthodoxy transmission	Education is positioned as a means of reproducing Islamic legal and moral traditions rather than as a space for ideological experimentation. The primary objectives are value continuity, normative stability, and religious obedience.
5	Emphasis on morality and social regulation	Violations of the shari‘a are perceived as threats to the collective social order rather than merely individual errors. Law functions as a moral bond that maintains communal order and stability.

3. The Conceptual Framework of Educational Conservatism in Sahnun’s Thought

Based on the synthesis of findings, educational conservatism in Sahnun’s thought may be conceptualized as a framework comprising three principal dimensions. First, the epistemological–normative dimension, which emphasizes the supremacy of revealed texts and fiqh tradition as sources of educational legitimacy.^{49 50} Within this dimension, education functions as a mechanism for transmitting valid and normatively bounded knowledge.

Second, the juridical–disciplinary dimension, in which education serves as a means of internalizing law and cultivating normative compliance.⁵¹ Legal firmness is not understood as symbolic violence but as a pedagogical mechanism for shaping moral and social discipline.⁵² This dimension explains why conservative education is often associated with strict regulations and hierarchical authority structures.

Third, the moral–social dimension, which focuses on the formation of orthodox character to sustain socio-religious order. Education is not merely aimed at producing knowledgeable individuals but at shaping moral subjects capable of maintaining communal stability.⁵³ Mujahid's findings on orthodoxy-based character education in modern pesantren demonstrate the continued relevance and adaptability of this framework in contemporary contexts.⁵⁴

Accordingly, Sahnun's religious-conservative thought should be understood not as a historical residue but as a normative educational model with transhistorical relevance. This conceptual framework elucidates why educational conservatism persists across Islamic educational institutions, particularly pesantren, as a mechanism for preserving tradition, morality, and social stability.

RQ2. How Is Sahnun’s Religious-Conservative Thought Relevant to Contemporary Pesantren Education?

1. Patterns of Relevance of Sahnun’s Religious-Conservative Thought in Contemporary Pesantren Education

The findings indicate that the relevance of Sahnun’s religious-conservative thought to contemporary pesantren education is not literal or historical in nature but rather structural and normative. This relevance operates across three principal levels.

First, the level of religious authority and leadership. Sahnun’s thought positions the ulama as the central agents of normative and moral control within the community. This pattern finds strong resonance in pesantren leadership, where the kyai functions as the guardian of orthodoxy, the architect of institutional culture, and the regulator of values.⁵⁵ The findings of Kusumaningrum et al. further affirm that pesantren leadership is not ideologically neutral but actively shapes cultures of discipline and obedience, aligning closely with Sahnun’s paradigm of authoritative leadership as a mechanism for maintaining social order.⁵⁶

Second, the level of curriculum and epistemic orientation. Pesantren continue to position turāth texts as their primary epistemological foundation, reflecting Sahnun’s textual conservatism. However, as demonstrated by Bukhori Muslim et al., pesantren openness to global educational orientations does not negate this conservative foundation but rather reframes it within a universal

Islamic horizon.⁵⁷ In this context, Sahnun's conservatism functions as an anchoring framework that enables adaptation without the loss of normative legitimacy.⁵⁸

Third, the level of social and moral praxis. The relevance of Sahnun's thought is evident in how pesantren conceptualize education as an instrument of collective moral regulation. Practices of discipline, corrective sanctions, and the inculcation of adab, as documented by Damopolii et al., demonstrate that religious conservatism continues to be understood as a pedagogical strategy rather than merely a doctrinal inheritance.⁵⁹ Accordingly, Sahnun's relevance is functional in nature, serving to preserve social cohesion and moral stability amid ongoing social change.

Table 3. The Relevance of Religious Conservatism to Contemporary Pesantren

Level of Relevance	Core Aspect	Analytical Description	Manifestation in Contemporary Pesantren
1	Religious Authority and Leadership	Sahnun's thought positions ulama as the center of normative and moral control within the community. Religious authority functions to preserve orthodoxy, social order, and normative compliance. This relevance is structural rather than a literal historical imitation.	The kiai serves as a central leadership figure who shapes institutional culture, regulates student discipline, and reproduces religious values. Pesantren leadership is inherently ideological and normative.
2	Curriculum and Epistemic Orientation	Sahnun's textual conservatism is reflected in the supremacy of turāth texts as the epistemological foundation. This conservatism operates as an anchoring framework that allows adaptation without forfeiting normative legitimacy.	Classical texts (kitab kuning) remain central to the curriculum, while modern and global knowledge is selectively integrated within a universal Islamic framework.
3	Social and Moral Praxis	Education is understood as an instrument of collective moral regulation. Religious conservatism functions pedagogically to maintain social cohesion and moral stability rather than merely as a historical doctrine.	The application of discipline, educational sanctions, and the embedding adab as strategies for character formation and social order among students.

2. The Continuity of Sahnun's Thought in Pesantren Educational Practices and Systems

The continuity of Sahnun's thought in pesantren education is not static but dialectical, involving an ongoing negotiation between conservation and transformation. The findings demonstrate that pesantren reproduce Sahnun's conservative principles while simultaneously engaging in contextual adaptation.

At the level of institutional structure, pesantren continue to maintain hierarchical patterns grounded in religious authority, as documented by Fatmawati et al.⁶⁰ This structure can be genealogically traced to Sahnun's emphasis on obedience to scholars as guardians of social order.⁶¹ However, contemporary managerial challenges reveal the ambivalent implications of this continuity: while it safeguards institutional identity, it may also constrain administrative flexibility.⁶²

At the pedagogical level, continuity is evident in the orientation of education toward value transmission rather than purely cognitive development. Nevertheless, the implementation of Problem-Based Learning⁶³ illustrates that pesantren are capable of adopting innovative pedagogical methods without departing from a conservative framework. This reflects a mode of practical ijtihad also observable in Sahnun's approach, conservative in principle yet adaptive in application.⁶⁴

In the domain of social and ecological ethics, the continuity of Sahnun's thought undergoes an expansion in scope. Studies on eco-pesantren indicate that religious conservatism now extends beyond regulating the human–divine relationship to encompass the human–environment relationship.⁶⁵ ⁶⁶ The concern for social order that characterized Sahnun's thought is thus recontextualized as ecological order, demonstrating the continuity of values across an expanded field of praxis.⁶⁷

3. The Position of Sahnun's Intellectual Legacy within the Pesantren Educational Tradition

In synthesis, the findings position Sahnun's religious-conservative legacy as a normative–structural foundation within the pesantren educational tradition rather than as a rigid doctrine replicated ahistorically. Sahnun's conservatism functions as a deep structure shaping how pesantren conceptualize authority, knowledge, morality, and education.⁶⁸

First, Sahnun's legacy provides a framework for legitimizing orthodoxy, enabling pesantren to preserve their Islamic identity amid processes of modernization. Mujahid's findings suggest that orthodoxy-based character education can foster moderation rather than radicalism when managed institutionally.⁶⁹

Second, this legacy operates as a mechanism of social stabilization. Within the context of multicultural education and radicalism prevention,⁷⁰ Sahnun's conservatism is practiced as a filtering mechanism against extremist interpretations rather than as a catalyst for exclusivism. This reflects a transformation of conservatism from rigidity into a form of moderated normative regulation.⁷¹

Third, conceptually, Sahnun's position within the pesantren tradition may be understood as a model of reflective conservatism, faithful to foundational principles while responsive to contextual demands.⁷² Pesantren do not treat Sahnun as an authoritarian figure who fossilizes tradition but as an ethical reference for maintaining equilibrium between the continuity of turāth and the imperatives of social change.

Accordingly, the legacy of Sahnun's religious-conservative thought in pesantren education should not be regarded as a historical burden but as an intellectual and moral resource that continues to be negotiated and reinterpreted. In this context, conservatism functions not as a rejection of modernity but as a guiding framework that directs change while keeping it within the orbit of Islamic orthodoxy and collective maṣlahā.

Conclusion

This study concludes that Sahnun bin Sa'īd al-Tanūkhī's religious-conservative educational thought remains structurally and normatively relevant to contemporary pesantren education. His emphasis on textual authority, juridical discipline, moral regulation, and the transmission of normative tradition is reflected in the central role of kiai, the dominance of turāth as an epistemological foundation, and the function of pesantren as institutions for preserving orthodoxy and social cohesion. In this sense, Sahnun's conservatism operates not merely as a historical legacy but as a transhistorical educational framework shaping authority, curriculum orientation, and moral praxis within pesantren.

The findings further demonstrate that the continuity of Sahnun's thought in pesantren is dialectical and adaptive rather than literal or rigid. While pesantren conserve core epistemological and normative principles rooted in classical fiqh and scholarly tradition, they simultaneously engage in contextual transformation through pedagogical, managerial, and socio-ethical innovations. This reflective conservatism enables pesantren to regulate change so that it remains aligned with collective moral order and communal maṣlaḥa, positioning conservatism as a regulative resource rather than an obstacle to educational development.

Overall, this study contributes to the discourse on Islamic education by conceptualizing Sahnun as a model of reflective religious conservatism that integrates tradition, authority, and moral stability with contextual adaptation. Within the pesantren context, his educational thought provides a coherent normative reference for negotiating continuity and change, demonstrating how classical Islamic intellectual legacies continue to inform and legitimize contemporary educational practice.
